Workplace Investigations and Compliance stands as a critical discipline for all employers, human resource professionals, legal counsel, and managers. This specialized field involves the systematic and fair inquiry into allegations of misconduct, discrimination, harassment, and other policy violations, coupled with the proactive design and implementation of robust compliance programs. This course will delve deeply into the foundational principles of conducting impartial and thorough workplace investigations, from initial complaint intake to evidence collection, interviewing, and report writing. Participants will gain crucial insights into the various legal obligations that trigger investigations (e.g., Title VII, ADA, FMLA, whistleblowing laws), and how to maintain privileged communications. Emphasis will be placed on mastering advanced interviewing techniques, analyzing complex and often conflicting evidence, and making legally defensible findings. Concurrently, the course will explore the essential elements of a robust compliance program, covering key areas such as anti-discrimination, anti-harassment, retaliation prevention, and data privacy. By engaging with real-world case studies, mock investigation scenarios, and discussions on ethical dilemmas and emerging trends (e.g., AI in HR, ESG), attendees will develop the strategic acumen to effectively manage workplace issues, mitigate legal risks, and champion a culture of integrity and accountability, ensuring both legal defensibility and a positive employee experience.
